Trump threatens in push to fully reopen schools

By Laura Meckler
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON - President Donald Trump on Wednesday intensified his demand that schools fully reopen this fall, slamming the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, pressuring it to loosen guidance and threatening to cut funding for schools that do not open.

The CDC was already planning to issue new guidelines for schools in the coming days. But Vice President Mike Pence on Wednesday explicitly tied the effort to Trump's ire.

"The president said today we just don't want the guidance to be too tough," Pence told reporters. "And that's the reason next week the CDC is going to be issuing a new set of tools."

Pence, speaking at a briefing of the White House coronavirus task force, was replying to a question about the CDC's recommendation that students be kept 6 feet apart to prevent the spread of the novel coronavirus.

School officials across the country have concluded they cannot fully reopen while following that guidance, because classrooms are too small to accommodate all students with the recommended distancing.

Political imperative

The White House is pressing the case that opening school is necessary for students' academic and social-emotional well-being, and Trump's allies see a political imperative in convincing Americans that the nation has recovered from the coronavirus crisis.

The administration is finding it nearly impossible to control the situation, with the president's views often at odds with those of his health advisers, and decision-making resting with 50 states, more than 1,300 school districts and thousands of colleges and universities.

On Wednesday, New York City schools, the nation's largest school system, announced a plan that will have most students in school two days a week and learning from home the other three. Many other systems have announced or are considering similar plans.

He said his agency's goal is to work with districts to help them overcome challenges and find ways to open their doors.

California governor: Reopening of schools to be based on safety

By Patrick McGreevy
Los Angeles Times

SACRAMENTO, Calif. - Gov. Gavin Newsom said Wednesday that a decision on reopening California schools this fall will be made by local education and health officials weighing the state of the COVID-19 pandemic, and emphasized that he won't be swayed by statements from President Donald Trump urging campuses to bring back students quickly.

The governor's comments came as he warned that the number of coronavirus hospitalizations in California is continuing to surge, rising 44% in the last two weeks, and that another 111 Californians died from the virus in the last 24 hours.

In recent days, Trump has called on the country's public schools to reopen "quickly and beautifully," but Los Angeles County's top health official said earlier this week that the surge in new cases may require continued distance learning in the county.

On Wednesday, Newsom said he will not be moved by the president's criticism on social media of states moving carefully.

"I'm not worried about the latest tweets" from the president, Newsom said during a news conference Wednesday. "What we need to address is safely reopening schools and we need to make that a foundational principle. That to me is not negotiable."

Harvard, MIT sue ICE to halt student visa guidelines

(Bloomberg News) - Harvard University and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology are seeking a court order to stop the U.S. from enforcing new visa guidelines that could cast international students out of the country if schools offer only online classes.

"It appears that it was designed purposefully to place pressure on colleges and universities to open their on-campus classrooms for in-person instruction this fall, without regard to concerns for the health and safety of students, instructors, and others" amid the coronavirus pandemic, Harvard President Lawrence Bacow said Wednesday in a statement.

The U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement agency issued the rules Monday, barring visas for applicants studying at colleges offering only virtual instruction. Students on existing visas who want to remain in the U.S. must transfer to a school with in-person instruction or attend an institution that offers both remote and on-campus learning, according to ICE.

Harvard is seeking a temporary restraining order against the new guidelines. Presiding over the case is U.S. District Judge Allison Burroughs in Boston, who ruled for Harvard in the case alleging it discriminates against Asian Americans in admissions. She scheduled a status conference for Thursday.

Colleges have begun rolling out pandemic plans for the fall semester, with many offerings some form of limited in-person classes. Harvard said about 40% of students would return to its campus in Cambridge, Massachusetts, while all courses will be taught remotely.
